Mary Buckman is a sculptor who works out of her studio in San Diego, California.

She has been sculpting since 1982 and has earned a degree in Fine Art and Sculpture.

Ms. Buckman has formally shown her work throughout California and has received many awards and honorariums. She has successfully installed several public art works, commissioned by the City of San Diego, the City of Santee, California and the City of La Jolla, California. Buckman has recently completed two larger than lifesize figures cast in bronze for the Pierre Tousaint Teen Center in San Diego, California and four lifesize bronze figures for the Mission Federal Credit Union in Escondido, California. Currently, Ms. Buckman is working on a commission sculpting portraits of the nine Supreme Court Justices for the California Western School of Law.

The first of nine bronzes has been completed and installed at the United States Supreme Court in Washington D.C. Many of her sculptures are in collections throughout the United States and Europe.

Because of her interest in the human form, much of her work is figurative and lifesize. Clay and bronze are the mediums she prefers to work with while she concentrates on the human form as a vehicle to express her feelings about nature and the human condition.

Ms. Buckmans' work is now being shown at the Trios Gallery in Solana Beach, California and at the Sculptors' Guild in Balboa Park, San Diego, California where she gives classes in figurative sculpture and has served as president for the past five years.
